Featuring Theresa Acosta (New York Liberty), Dr. Christina Kennedy (Washington Mystics), Natalie Trotter (Women's Professional Basketball Athletic Trainers Association), and Brittanie Vaughn (Seattle Storm), the short interviews touch on the athletic trainers' memorable career moments, the rise of women in sports, advice for individuals early in their careers, and more.

"Behind every layup and three-point shot lies a team of dedicated athletic trainers, many of whom are women," said Megan LoRé, General Manager of Operations for Henry Schein's U.S. Specialty Distribution Group. "It's important that we acknowledge the contributions of women athletic trainers who work tirelessly behind the scenes to keep athletes at their best, physically and mentally. Henry Schein Medical is pleased to support these professionals with products, tools, and resources to help ensure their impact continues to be felt across the health care landscape."

National Girls and Women in Sports Day honors athletic achievements by women, recognizes the importance of sports and fitness participation for all girls and women, and celebrates the power of women in sports and the continued push for equity.

"Witnessing the diverse journeys of women athletic trainers in our annual video is truly inspiring," said Eric Kearns, National Sales Director of Henry Schein Medical's Athletics and Schools business. "As partners, we believe in amplifying the voices of our customers and celebrating their contributions. By supporting the remarkable work done by women athletic trainers, we hope to empower the next generation."

2025 marks the third year Henry Schein Medical's Athletics and Schools business has produced a video celebrating women ATs and their contributions. The Company has featured a total of 14 women ATs from three different professional sports leagues, showcasing their expertise, dedication, and impact on athletes and teams. During National Girls and Women in Sports Day 2024, Henry Schein Medical featured ATs representing five National Basketball Association teams.
